Corentin:

I have always loved music, and I love singing choral music, especially in acoustically pleasing spaces! I had some formal training in vocal music, but did not choose that as my career path.

By 10 years after its founding as a mechanical design company, West General was receiving more and more inquiries from its mechanical equipment customers about quieting noisy workspaces. So the founder began to speak with acousticians, and with other experts in the noise control field, to respond to these customers. This was taking place on a small level when I joined the company in 1987.

These acoustics experts also provided information on how to make existing office and schoolroom spaces more acoustically pleasing.

This intrigued me and captured my interest, even while I was working in the business end of the company. With the founder's consent, I hired an engineer who is also a musician, and he helped us to steer our business model more purposefully towards serving the acoustics market. I began taking classes in acoustics and noise control, and reading books by prominent acousticians. I was immediately able to put this new knowledge to use, as we poured more effort into serving the acoustical needs of our expanding customer base.

Over time, this has become the primary mission of our company, to offer the best acoustical materials and noise control equipment available to solve sound-related problems.

I hope this provides more clarification for you.
